CALL FOR PAPERS

In this localised / regionalised in-person special topics symposium, we are seeking to think and move through the role that popular, social, and vernacular dance plays (or does not play or only marginally plays or should ideally play) in higher education institutions in the Australasian as well as the broader Asia Pacific region, and to further reflect (on) the reality of how our dance communities interact as well as how our dance scholars interact in between and across these areas.

This idea started taking shape as part of the #PopDanceProfs campaign initiated by the PoP Moves affiliated Dance Studies Association Working Group for Popular, Social, and Vernacular Dance in the lead up to DSA’s 2022 annual conference. In this campaign, the Working Group advocated for popular dance being knowledge in order to address the ways that higher education institutions have not valued all forms of dance equally. To contribute to the discussion from a regionalised / localised perspective, the Tiny PoP Moves Salon Australasia team ran a special topics salon at the end of 2022, focusing on the role that popular dance plays in higher education institutions in the region, given how dispersed popular dance scholar/practitioners are, for example, how those working regularly in academia are often asked to fit into different departments that are not necessarily dance oriented, or how popular dance scholar/practitioners are often asked to cover a week or two on the topic as casually contracted work (ie. guest lectures/workshops/tutorials), and how this positions popular, social, and vernacular dance in the broader curriculum.
For this 2023 localised / regionalised symposium, PoP Moves Australasia invites traditional and also specifically non-traditional papers, roundtables, workshops, and/or alternative format presentations that reflect on the possibilities and limitations of popular, social, and vernacular dance in higher education institutions. Papers may address, but are not limited to, some of the below questions:

What is the role of popular, social, and vernacular dance in dance departments? How much are they included? In what way do they show up in the curriculum?

What forms of knowledges do popular/social/vernacular dance scholars/practitioners bring to the institution?

What are the benefits of including popular, social, and vernacular dance more firmly into the curriculum, both inside and outside of dance departments?

What conditions need to be created to more firmly situate popular, social, and vernacular dance knowledges into the curriculum and into departments, dance or otherwise?

What are the barriers to make popular, social, and vernacular dance knowledges more firmly part of the curriculum?

How do popular/social/vernacular dance scholars/practitioners navigate institutions, misconceptions about their practices, and precarity?

What are the interactions and collaborations that you have experienced or witnessed between dancers/dance groups/dance researchers/dance institutions in Australasia and the broader Asia Pacific region?
How To Apply

PoP Moves Aus welcomes proposals in the form of regular academic papers, pre-formed panels, round tables, and also especially workshops and other alternative formats given the topic of the conference.

For those unable to travel to Auckland or wishing to further address the issue of (im)mobility (in)accessibility within a globalised but also even a regional context, we encourage remote/virtual presentations, as we are aware that in-person options might not be feasible / accessible to everyone in the region.
