About

The Annual MUBIT Doctoral Workshop in Late- and Post-Ottoman Studies is a two-day workshop in Basel, Switzerland, designed for international doctoral students conducting research on the Near and Middle East. The workshop consists of a two-day, intensive program in which select students work closely with invited experts. Successful completion of the workshop entitles students to 3 ECTS credits.

This year, we are thrilled to host Prof. Dr. Laura Robson of Penn State University, USA, to lead our 11th annual workshop on the topic of “States and Statelessness in the Post-Ottoman Middle East.” For more information on the content of the workshop, see below. The 2023 workshop will be held in person between 20 October (12:00 p.m.) and 21 October (13:00 p.m.) at the University of Basel.

Application

Currently enrolled Ph.D. students who wish to attend the workshop should write an email to Falestin Naïli (falestin.naili@unibas.ch) and Alexander Balistreri (alexander.balistreri@unibas.ch), with a short text summarizing their academic background and explaining how this workshop fits in to their research interests (max. 400 words, in third-person singular, in English). Applicants should also provide a CV (PDF, in English). Up to 15 applicants will be selected for participation in the workshop, based on relevance of their research project and a demonstrated ability to contribute constructively to the discussions.

The deadline for applications is 1 September 2023. Applicants will receive an answer regarding their participation by 8 September 2022, at the latest. The workshop is free of charge. Unfortunately, funding for travel and lodging is currently unavailable. We will provide successful applicants with information about more affordable accommodation in Basel.

Requirements for Successful Participation

Participants are entitled to 3 ECTS points for successful participation. Participants will receive by mid-September a list of readings to be completed prior to the workshop. Successful participation at the workshop is subject to the mandatory completion of the required readings in advance and active participation in the workshop discussions.
States and Statelessness in the Post-Ottoman Middle East

Course Description

The fractured, uneven, and often violent processes by which nation-states emerged from the postwar landscape of the former Ottoman empire have received exponentially greater scholarly attention than the concomitant and often similar processes that actively produced various iterations of post-Ottoman statelessness. This workshop begins to redress this omission by examining some manifestations of statelessness across the Middle East and North Africa in the period 1920–1967, emphasizing its emergence as both concept and practice— inseparable from the nation-state, to be sure, but marked by much more than merely the absence of citizenship or nationality.

From the multifarious production of wartime and postwar refugees in Syria and Lebanon to the mandatory remaking of Palestinians as stateless nationals to imaginaries of state-free revolutionary spaces in midcentury Algeria, iterations of post-Ottoman statelessness took on firm political shapes that suggested particular political futures for the Middle Eastern nation-state. In the post-WWI Mashreq, refugees and migratory communities (willingly and unwillingly) produced and enforced new national borders and provided political and territorial venues for the exertion of experimental forms of international and imperial power but also local authority. In Palestine, the mandatory production of a majority indigenous population—both Muslim and Christian—as stateless nationals within their homeland offered a new mode of simultaneously producing both state and statelessness to yield a particular kind of post-1948 political landscape in Palestine and beyond, one in which external actors could continue to maintain a territorial stake in the region. A different iteration of statelessness, rather more utopian in nature, emerged in wartime and postwar Algeria, where the capital of Algiers was reimagined as a kind of passport-free refuge for global revolutionaries of all stripes. In all these cases, the Ottoman Empire loomed as a historical memory of a more flexible (though not always less violent) iteration of state, one that these various imaginaries of statelessness continued to hold in mind as they reimagined the possible nature and consequences of an existence outside the state in this new postimperial era.

This workshop, in other words, posits that alongside a history of state-making in the Middle East we should also note a history of creating statelessness, and not as an absence but a presence. It seeks to investigate what statelessness has meant as a political practice in its own right, and to consider the particular legacies of the Ottoman empire to emerging concepts of living in some way beyond the reach of the modern state—or even doing without it altogether.

Workshop Sessions:

1 | Ottoman disintegration and the wartime making of Middle Eastern statelessness
2 | Colonial statelessness: Refugees, migrants, and borders in mandate Syria and Lebanon
3 | Ethnonational statelessness: Palestine and the new international system
4 | Utopian statelessness: The case of revolutionary Algeria
Laura Robson is the Oliver-McCourtney Professor of History at Penn State University. She has published extensively on the topics of refugee and minority rights, forced migration, ethnic cleansing, and the emergence of international legal regimes around resettlement and asylum.

Her most recent books are The Politics of Mass Violence in the Middle East (Oxford, 2020), a history of the relationship between violence and the state in the twentieth-century Eastern Mediterranean, and Partitions: A Transnational History of 20th Century Territorial Separatism (with Arie Dubnov; Stanford, 2019), a comparative examination of the political “solution” of ethnic partition in the decolonizing world. She is also the author of States of Separation: Transfer, Partition, and the Making of the Modern Middle East (University of California, 2017) and Colonialism and Christianity in Mandate Palestine (University of Texas, 2011), as well as the editor of Minorities and the Modern Arab World: New Perspectives (Syracuse, 2016).

She regularly engages publicly on topics related to refugeedom and asylum, and has contributed to a wide variety of national and international media outlets, NGO reports, and policy publications. In 2021–’22 she was a Fellow at the Wilson Center in Washington, D.C., and is now serving on the Center’s newly constituted Expert Working Group on Forced Displacement.

With Jennifer Dueck, she is co-founder and co-editor of StatelessHistories.org, a digital humanities project exploring the varied and multifaceted experiences of statelessness in the modern era.
